According to the new State Ed Framework, the curriculum framework is based on the geography and history of the Eastern Hemisphere, including the development of cultures, civilizations, and empires; interaction between societies; and the comparison of trends in government and economics. This text covers all of those content areas in its chapters, but is not the only resource. The online resources that come with the text to supplement it with the social studies skills as stressed in the new state model. There are specific sections in the text and supplemental resources that instruct the "Thinking Like a Historian" skills which are the model skill set of the new state framework, stressing more than content, such as, Analyzing Primary and Secondary sources, Comparing and Contrasting, Researching and Analyzing Internet Resources, Drawing Conclusions, and Predicting Consequences, to name a few. What is helpful with this text series as well for modern day students is that it is NOT just a historical text, it does quite a few "Connections to Today" and "Then and Now" which is so necessary for students to relate to the curriculum. Some of the other textbooks that were looked at were heavy on content and not as focused on the skill development as this series is.
