Day!

- Our Message today for Digital Citizenship week is.....
- If some stranger in the street asked you for your name, address, and phone number, you'd say no, right? Well, the same rules apply online. Before you share anything about yourself, you should stop, and ask a couple of questions. Who are you sending this info to? And what are they going to do with it? The Internet is full of strangers, and lots of people are not who they pretend to be. To be safe, you have to be smart! Think about what you're sharing: never give out your full name, your address, your phone number, the name of your school, or other private information!

Day 4

- It's Spirit Week! Tomorrow is Pajama Day!

- Our message today for Digital Citizenship week is.....
  - Being online can be scary sometimes. No matter how much we try to avoid them, cyberbullies are everywhere. Cyberbullying can include sending mean messages; posting embarrassing stuff about somebody; leaving someone out of online groups, and spreading rumors. Sometimes it's easy to forget that there's a real live person with feelings behind the screen, so bullies say things online that they wouldn't say to a person in real life.
  - If you're tempted to be mean to someone online, don't do it! Don't write or text anything you wouldn't say in person. Even if you mean it as a joke you can hurt someone's feelings. If you're angry or upset, wait a few minutes to calm down before you write something you can't take back!
  - Remember: Whatever you say online can stay there forever. And even though you may feel anonymous, websites and cellular services can usually figure out your true identity. So be kind online!
