"Lou's greatest legacy is the one he left at Kenmore East. Many have been profoundly influenced by his hard work. He was a pivotal figure in almost all the school has done over the past 50 years. A member of the Kenmore East Hall of Fame, Lou was a great supporter of interscholastic athletics and a leader committed to the development of our youth."

Jim Dunnigan, 1969

Principal Albert J. Witzig

I need to go back to 1957 for my first recollection of Kenmore East. I remember riding in the car with my mother as we passed the site of construction of the new high school for Kenmore. "That's where your brother will go to high school, and you'll follow a few years later." I remember seeing the I-beams in the corner which is now Mr. Allen's room and thinking how tall the building was. After we drove past it, I didn't think much about the school. After all, I was only six.

Since then I've thought about Kenmore East a lot—not only as an administrator, but also as a student, teacher, and coach.

The birth of Kenmore East was a result of the tremendous post-World War II growth in the most populous suburb of Buffalo. As Kenmore High School continued to move from one building to another prior to WWII, the population growth of the area extended to the eastern area of the town, necessitating the construction of another high school. Farmland owned by Jacob Fries was purchased and a school was built.

The school opened its doors in September 1959, welcoming eleventh- and twelfth-grade students who were transplanted from Kenmore High School and a group of tenth-grade students who, I'm sure, were in awe of where they were. Most of the teachers were either enterprising veterans from Kenmore High School who were willing to start a new tradition and identity, or they were newly hired teachers walking into unknown territory. Under the direction of newly-appointed principal Albert J. Witzig, Kenmore East was born. Then-Assistant Principal Alan MacGamwell recalled, "When the bell rang for homeroom, we knew we just started a new school!" Witzig, MacGamwell, and curriculum consultant Frank Hyatt shook hands in joy.

For the first few years, extra rooms were available on the third floor. A few sixth-grade classes from Brighton Elementary, which was overflowing with students, were placed in what is now the social studies hall. (On a personal note, my mother was a music teacher at Brighton; she would push her cart from the elementary school to East and take the elevator to the third floor to teach the elementary students. My brother, who was a tenth grader at that time, would make sure he didn't see her when she came in to the building!)

One of the first evidences of this was in 1962 at the East-West Football game. At that time, East and West shared Crosby Field as their home site. Parker Field, since named Sparky Adams Field, was not constructed until 1970. Trailing by seven points in the fourth quarter, a Reid Grefe-to-George Constantino pass for a touchdown, and the ensuing extra point by John Anderson, gave Kenmore East a 20 to 20 victory—a tie on the scoreboard, but a victory in the players' hearts and a stand-up statement that Kenmore East was free from the oppression of the "big brother" across the tracks.

As Kenmore East developed its identity, school colors were chosen. Originally, Kenmore East was to be represented by black and gold. Since the newly-opened Cardinal O'Hara High School had claimed the colors first, East became the home of the blue-and-gold Bulldogs! East, in its early years, was essentially identical to Kenmore High School, but the spirit of the new school, independent and gaining its own legs, was evident.

The 1960s saw a continued increase in student population at Kenmore East. By the end of the decade, graduating classes were approaching 900 each year, actually peaking at 1004 in 1972. The total enrollment of the school, grades 10-12, was about 2600 students, a far cry from the 1250, grades 9-12, we have now. Teachers were added each year in the 1960s, many of whom spent their entire career teaching at KE.

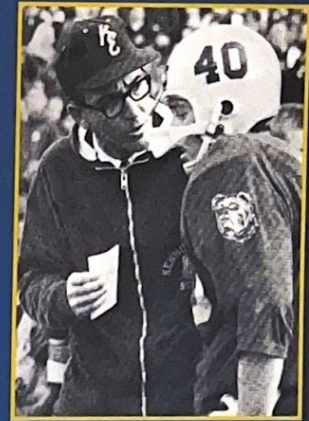

As society changed, so did Kenmore East. The increase of drug usage found its way into the schools as did the political issues of the day. Kenmore East adjusted to and accommodated the social and political trends while continuing to address the academic needs of its community.

In the early 1980s, ninth graders were added to the high school, changing the design of the secondary instructional systems. This had a major impact on all aspects of high school life, one which continues to this day.

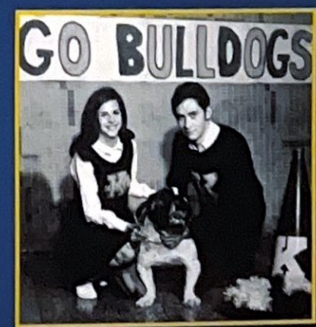

As I look back at Kenmore East over the past 50 years, at first, I can't believe that I'm the one to make such reflections and how quickly the time has gone. I recall the day of my brother's graduation and sneaking up to the second floor to get a "real look" at what a high school was like, and I was so nervous that I was in a spot that I shouldn't be in. Going to basketball games and football games, I was eager to be one of the players in those competitions. I didn't realize it then, but I later understood that Kenmore East would be my past, present, and future.

My message to you who graduate this year, to those who have graduated in the past 50 years, and to those who graduate in the future: Once a Bulldog, always a Bulldog!
